

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS

JAYME GORDON,

Plaintiff,

v.

DREAMWORKS ANIMATION SKG, INC., DREAMWORKS ANIMATION LLC, and
PARAMOUNT PICTURES, CORP.,

Defendants.

Civil Action No. 1:11-cv-10255

JURY TRIAL DEMANDED

COMPLAINT

Plaintiff, Jayme Gordon (hereinafter “Gordon”), by and through his attorneys of record, hereby alleges as his Complaint against DreamWorks Animation SKG, Inc., DreamWorks Animation LLC, and Paramount Pictures, Corp. (collectively, “Defendants”), as follows:

NATURE OF THIS ACTION

1. This is a case of copyright infringement arising out of Defendants’ creation and exploitation of the highly successful “Kung Fu Panda” franchise, including the “Kung Fu Panda” animated motion picture, which is based on and copied from copyrighted works authored and owned by Gordon, collectively titled “Kung Fu Panda Power.” An example of the substantial, and even striking similarity between two of Gordon’s Kung Fu Panda Power characters and two of Defendants’ Kung Fu Panda characters is shown here:

2. Gordon is an artist who has spent much of his lifetime creating and developing characters and stories. One of Gordon's many character ensembles is his Kung Fu Panda Power property, which he created in the early 1990s that features a Kung Fu fighting giant panda who likes to eat, his companion, a rare small red panda who also is a Kung Fu fighter, and a Kung Fu fighting super group known as the "Five Fists of Fury" that consists of a tiger, crane, mantis, monkey, and a venomless snake.

3. Gordon first registered components of his Kung Fu Panda Power property with the United States Copyright Office in 2000, and since has obtained additional copyright registrations for additional parts of his Kung Fu Panda Power work. Examples of illustrations Gordon deposited with the Copyright Office in 2000 are shown below.

4. Starting long before the release of Defendants' Kung Fu Panda animated film, Gordon routinely sent his works featuring his illustrated characters, including his Kung Fu Panda Power characters, to animation and film studios. Upon information and belief, access to Gordon's illustrated literary works and, in particular, Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power work, enabled Defendants to create and exploit their own Kung Fu Panda franchise, which is an infringement of Gordon's copyrights in violation of the United States Copyright Act.

5. The drawings, illustrations, characters, character attributes, literary text, and artistic expression embodied within Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power, all of which are owned solely and exclusively by Gordon, are referred to hereinafter, collectively, as the "Kung Fu Panda Power Work."

FACTS

Jayme Gordon – Illustrator, Author and Creator of “The USA, Union of Super Animals”

14. Jayme Gordon is an artist, illustrator, and author who for decades has been creating original characters and stories.

15. Gordon has created and illustrated dozens of animal and insect characters and has written many stories involving his characters. As a child, Gordon was inspired by the collectibles in his home and his surroundings growing up outside of Boston, to create his animal and insect characters, many of whom are skilled in martial arts. Many of Gordon’s characters were first conceived when he was a child and more fully developed by Gordon as a young adult.

16. Many of Gordon's martial arts-skilled animal and insect characters comprise Gordon's "Union of Super Animals," also referred to by Gordon as simply, the "U.S.A."

17. Gordon's Union of Super Animals was conceived by Gordon to be the overarching super union that is comprised of Gordon's wide-ranging cast of characters, many of whom possess superior martial arts abilities, including his Kung Fu Panda Power characters. Gordon's Union of Super Animals includes, among many other characters, "Karate Marty Mantis," a karate fighting, sword swinging mantis, and "Zito The Super Samurai Mosquito," a modern-day mosquito samurai super hero who previously was a human samurai killed in the 15th century, both of whom are shown here:

18. Also included in Gordon's Union of Super Animals is Gordon's illustrated literary work titled "Super Duck Super Duck," featuring "Fortune Cookie" — a duck that wears chopsticks as a head piece, and "The Pu Pu Fighters" — a group of four Kung Fu fighting ducks who work as waiters in a Chinese restaurant owned by Fortune Cookie that doubles as the group's headquarters. Gordon's illustrations of Fortune Cookie and some of Gordon's other duck characters in this work are shown here:

19. Gordon has been drawn to the number five since childhood and often creates characters in groups of five, like Gordon's "Five Fists of Fury" that appears in his Kung Fu Panda Power Work.

20. Gordon first created a group known by the name "Fists of Fury" in another illustrated, literary work that is part of his Union of Super Animals, titled Super Sumo Kamikaze Komodo Dragon Wrestlers.

21. In the 1990s, Gordon operated a retail cart and then a retail store at the Dedham Mall near Boston known for a period of time as "Animation Station" where he sold, among other items, apparel featuring some of his characters. Around that same time, Gordon had costumes made of many of his animal characters. Some of these characters, like those pictured below, appeared at promotional events in and around Boston.

22. Many of Gordon's illustrations and stories, including portions of Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work, were displayed on Gordon's website, www.lucky lizard.com (named after the very first character Gordon created, Lucky Lizard), starting in 1999, and were deposited with the United States Copyright Office in 2000.

Jayne Gordon's Creation, Authorship and Sole Ownership of "Kung Fu Panda Power"

23. Beginning in the late 1980s or early 1990s until in or around 2002, Gordon created and developed the original characters and stories that comprise the Kung Fu Panda Power Work. Gordon was, in part, inspired to create his Kung Fu Panda Power Work, and some of the characters in this work, by a visit to Chinatown in downtown Boston when he was an adolescent.

24. Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work features a diverse group of animal characters that come together to fight evil and in doing so, find their inner strengths. Gordon envisioned that his Kung Fu Panda Power story and characters would one day reach children everywhere, empowering them to overcome struggles due to diversity, by becoming an animated television series and film, and a series of children's books, among other things.

25. Gordon's original Kung Fu Panda Power characters include "Kidd" panda, a Kung Fu fighting giant panda bear and "Redd" panda, a very rare, small, red panda who also is a Kung Fu fighter. Gordon's cast of characters also includes the "Five Fists of Fury," a Kung Fu fighting super group consisting of a tiger named "Tattoo Tiger," a mantis named "Mantis San," a crane named "Sugar Cane," a venomless snake named "Venom Chang," and a half-monkey, half-chimpanzee named "Manchu," as well as a trio of pachyderms (a rhinoceros, elephant, and hippopotamus) called "The Mighty 3." Together, these characters team up to protect the peaceful animal kingdom in China, "The Valley of Peace" from evil Kung Fu fighting animals such as a snow leopard and a tiger-wolf. Gordon's early sketches of his Kung Fu Panda Power characters in the "Valley of Peace," including Kidd, Redd, the "Five Fists of Fury," and "The Might 3" from the early 1990s are shown below:

26. As part of Gordon's creative process, he collaborated with his friend and co-worker, Ken Partello, a caricature artist. At Gordon's direction, Partello, in the early 1990s, sketched some of Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power characters, namely, Gordon's giant panda Kidd, his red panda Redd, and the Five Fists of Fury, as shown below:

27. In addition to illustrating his original Kung Fu Panda Power characters such as Kidd, Redd, the "Five Fists of Fury," and "The Mighty 3," Gordon began writing stories, and synopses for an animated television series and an animated film involving these characters in or around 1992, which he continued to develop and evolve up through 2002.

28. In Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work, Kidd is a Kung Fu fighting giant panda who loves to eat Chinese food and his resulting rotund shape does not lend itself to Kung Fu fighting. Kidd's companion, Redd, is small red panda whose Kung Fu master skills belie his small size, and who always carries chopsticks. Gordon's Kidd and Redd characters are accompanied by and work with a Kung Fu fighting super group known as the "Five Fists of Fury," comprised of a monkey, tiger, crane, mantis and a venomless snake, who are supporting characters to Kidd and Redd. In parts of Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work, Kidd is a fun-loving panda who works as a waiter in a Chinese restaurant. In one part of Gordon's story, the "Five Fists of Fury" laugh at Kidd when he practices Kung Fu in their Kung Fu fighting school because Kidd is obese, out of shape, and appears to be an unlikely Kung Fu master. Parts of Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work are set in "The Valley of Peace," a peaceful animal kingdom where Kidd and Redd live, along with the "Five Fists of Fury." Gordon's story includes the "Kung Fu Masters Ceremony," an annual celebration in "The Valley of Peace" where one animal is crowned the official Kung Fu master animal of the town. Kidd, Redd, and the "Five Fists of Fury" members fight an evil Kung Fu fighting animal that wants to be named the "Kung Fu Master of All," but it is Kidd who defeats the evil animal and saves "The Valley of Peace."

Defendants' Infringement of Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work

29. Upon information and belief, after obtaining copies of or viewing illustrations and stories comprising Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work, one or both of the DW Defendants created an animated motion picture titled "Kung Fu Panda."

30. The "Kung Fu Panda" film features a giant panda named Po who becomes a Kung Fu master responsible for defending the "Valley of Peace." The giant panda Po is trained by, and eventually becomes friends with, a small red panda named Master Shifu. The "Kung Fu Panda" film features a Kung Fu fighting super group called the "Furious Five" comprised of a tiger, monkey, crane, mantis, and venomless snake.

31. Upon information and belief, after receiving copies of, or viewing illustrations and stories comprising Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work, one or both of the DW Defendants created a second animated motion picture titled "Secrets of the Furious Five," an animated short film featuring the giant panda Po as a Kung Fu master, his friend and trainer, the small, red panda Master Shifu, and the “Furious Five” characters. The “Secrets of the Furious Five” film tells the story of each of the five characters that comprise the “Furious Five.”

32. The DVD artwork of the “Kung Fu Panda” and “Secrets of the Furious Five” films are shown below:

33. Upon information and belief, Defendants, with knowledge and intent, created, financed, developed, manufactured, distributed, displayed and/or exploited the “Kung Fu Panda” film and the “Secrets of the Furious Five” film. Both of these films are unauthorized copies of and derivative works based on Gordon’s Kung Fu Panda Power Work.

34. Upon information and belief, one or more Defendants, with knowledge and intent, actively license to third parties the right to use the characters that appear in the “Kung Fu Panda” film and the “Secrets of the Furious Five” film, for toys, games, dolls, figurines, video games and books, among other things, that likewise are unauthorized copies of and derivative works based on Gordon’s Kung Fu Panda Power Work.

35. Upon information and belief, one or both of the DW Defendants, with knowledge and intent, are currently creating and developing “Kung Fu Panda 2,” formerly titled “Kaboom of Doom” and/or “SKA2OOSH.” “Kung Fu Panda 2,” a trailer for which is currently displayed on www.kungfupanda.com, a website owned by DreamWorks Animation, is a sequel to the “Kung Fu Panda” film, and will be distributed, upon information and belief, by Paramount.

Comparison of Gordon’s and Defendants’ Works

36. The “Kung Fu Panda” film and “Secrets of the Furious Five” film feature characters, character depictions, character personality traits, illustrations, expression, settings, story elements, plot and sequences of events that are unlawful copies and derivatives of the copyrightable elements embodied in Gordon’s Kung Fu Panda Power Work.

37. Characters featured in the “Kung Fu Panda” film and “Secrets of the Furious Five” film are unlawful copies of, derivative works of, and substantially similar, even strikingly similar to, the characters in Gordon’s Kung Fu Panda Power Work.

38. Gordon’s Kidd and Defendants’ Po are both Kung Fu fighting giant pandas with large appetites. Their visual appearance and character attributes are substantially similar, even strikingly similar.

39. Gordon’s Redd and Defendants’ Master Shifu are both red pandas and are both Kung Fu masters who use chopsticks in connection with Kung Fu fighting. Their visual appearance and character attributes are substantially similar, even strikingly similar.

40. Gordon’s Kung Fu fighting giant and red pandas are supported by a group of five Kung Fu fighting animals known as the “Five Fists of Fury,” which is comprised of a tiger, monkey, crane, mantis, and a venomless snake.

41. In the “Kung Fu Panda” film, the Kung Fu fighting giant and red pandas are supported by a group of five Kung Fu fighting animals known as the “Furious Five,” which is comprised of a tiger, monkey, crane, mantis, and a venomless snake.

42. The setting of portions of Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work is "The Valley of Peace."

43. The setting of portions of the "Kung Fu Panda" film and "Secrets of the Furious Five" film is the "Valley of Peace."

44. Other characters that appear in the "Kung Fu Panda" film appear substantially similar to characters Gordon created before 2000. Gordon's "Fortune Cookie" character, who appears in Gordon's story titled "Super Duck Super Duck," owns a Chinese restaurant and wears chopsticks as a headpiece. In the "Kung Fu Panda" film, Po's father, a duck, owns a Chinese restaurant and wears chopsticks as a headpiece. Gordon's "The Mighty 3" includes a loincloth-wearing, martial arts fighting rhinoceros that teams up with Gordon's "Five Fists of Fury" to guard "The Valley of Peace" against evil martial arts fighting animals. In the "Kung Fu Panda" film, a group of loincloth-wearing rhinoceros are prison guards who protect the "Valley of Peace" from the imprisoned evil snow leopard.

45. In addition to Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power characters, components of the literary expression created by Gordon and embodied in his Kung Fu Panda Power Work also were infringed by Defendants in the "Kung Fu Panda" film and "Secrets of the Furious Five" film such that many of the story elements, settings, and events in these films appear substantially, even strikingly, similar to those in Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power stories.

46. In stories that make up Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work, Kidd is a giant panda who is as a waiter in a Chinese restaurant and loves to eat Chinese food. Kidd's temperament is fun-loving and easy-going. In one scene, the "Five Fists of Fury" laugh at Kidd when he practices Kung Fu in their martial arts school because Kidd is obese, out of shape, and appears to be an unlikely Kung Fu master. Although Kidd would rather be eating, his interest in martial arts training grows and he starts to show true promise as a Kung Fu master. Parts of Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work are set in "The Valley of Peace," an animal kingdom where Kidd and Redd live, along with the "Five Fists of Fury." One part of Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power story features the "Kung Fu Masters Ceremony," which is an annual celebration in "The Valley of Peace" where one animal is named "Official Kung Fu Animal" of the town. Kidd, Redd, and the "Five Fists of Fury" members fight an evil Kung Fu fighting animal that wants to be named the "Kung Fu Master of All," but it is Kidd that defeats the evil animal, due to his large girth and Kung Fu training and saves "The Valley of Peace." Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work features various Kung Fu fighting animal villains, one of which is a snow leopard fought by Redd.

47. In the "Kung Fu Panda" film, Po is an overweight and fun-loving giant panda who is a waiter in a Chinese noodle restaurant. He dreams of being a Kung Fu fighter but his rotund shape does not lend itself to Kung Fu fighting. This is a problem because Po has been chosen, quite surprisingly, as the "Chosen One" to save his peaceful animal village, the "Valley of Peace" from an evil Kung Fu fighting snow leopard at a large ceremony attended by many town members. Po's Kung Fu master, a small red panda whose skills belie his small size, trains Po using food and chopsticks when he realizes that Po is motivated by food. Although Po prefers eating to training, he eventually starts to show true promise as a Kung Fu fighter. The "Furious Five" doubt Po's fighting ability when he first practices Kung Fu at their martial arts school because Po is obese, unskilled, and viewed as an unlikely Kung Fu master. Nevertheless, Po does become a Kung Fu master due to his strength, coordination, and training with the red panda. Armed with his new Kung Fu skills, Po defeats the evil snow leopard and saves the "Valley of Peace."

Access To Gordon's Kung Fu Panda Power Work

48. In or around 1985, Gordon began sending his portfolio of illustrated literary texts to motion picture studios, television networks, book publishers, and other companies specializing in children's animation and entertainment. Gordon sent promotional flyers and T-shirts displaying his characters, and copies of his illustrations and text to these companies for many years.

49. From at least as early as the late 1980s or early 1990s, Gordon submitted multiple packages to The Walt Disney Company ("Disney") that contained his original illustrations and stories, including components of Kung Fu Panda Power Work.

50. In the early 1990s, Gordon visited "Pleasure Island," a section of The Walt Disney World resort in Orlando, Florida, where he met Michael Eisner and Frank Wells. At that meeting, Gordon was invited to send his works to Disney, which Gordon did. A photo of Gordon and Mr. Eisner from that meeting is shown below:

51. Upon information and belief, Michael Eisner was the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Disney from 1984 to 2005, and Frank Wells was the President and Chief Operating Officer of Disney from 1984 to 1994.

52. In or around the early 1990's, Sharon Eisen, an employee of Disney, telephoned Gordon at his residence and requested that Gordon send his works to Disney. Gordon did so.

53. Upon information and belief, Jeffrey Katzenberg was Chairman of The Walt Disney Studios, a division of Disney, from 1984 from 1994.

54. Upon information and belief, as Chairman Mr. Katzenberg was responsible for worldwide production, marketing, and distribution of all of Disney's live action and animated motion pictures and television programs. During his tenure, Disney's animated productions included "The Little Mermaid," "Beauty and the Beast," "Aladdin," and "The Lion King."

55. Upon information and belief, Mr. Eisner was Mr. Katzenberg's superior at Disney. Upon information and belief, Mr. Katzenberg was employed at Disney at the time Gordon discussed his works with Mr. Eisner, sent materials to Mr. Eisner, and sent materials to Ms. Eisen.

56. Upon information and belief, Mr. Katzenberg left Disney in 1994 and formed DreamWorks Studios (a/k/a DW Studios and/or DreamWorks LLC) with Steven Spielberg and David Geffen. In or around 1994, Katzenberg publicly stated that this new company would produce animated films that would compete directly with Disney. Upon information and belief, the animation division of DreamWorks Studios, led by Katzenberg, hired Disney animators to create what it perceived to be "Disney-like" films, only better.

57. Upon information and belief, in October 2004, the animation division of DreamWorks Studios was spun-off into a publicly traded company named DreamWorks

Animation SKG, Inc., a defendant in this action, of which Katzenberg is Chief Executive Officer and Director. Upon information and belief, DreamWorks Animation SKG operates independently from DreamWorks Studios and solely produces computer generated animated feature films and programs.

58. At DreamWorks Animation SKG, Mr. Katzenberg has been responsible for the production of some of the highest grossing animated movies of all time including “Kung Fu Panda” in 2008.

59. In the late 1990’s, Gordon sent his illustrations and stories, including those from his Kung Fu Panda Power Work, to the animation division of DreamWorks Studios.

60. In or around 1999, while vacationing in Belize, Gordon obtained the name and contact information of a DreamWorks Studios employee. After returning to the United States, Gordon mailed a package that contained a number of his illustrated works, including Gordon’s Kung Fu Panda Power Work, directly to this employee at DreamWorks Studios. The Company acknowledged receipt of Gordon’s package in a rejection letter it mailed to Gordon dated October 15, 1999.

61. In 1999, Gordon created a website, www.lucky lizard.com, that displayed his character illustrations and stories, including a selection of characters and stories from his Kung Fu Panda Power Work. Gordon’s www.lucky lizard.com website, and later his www.jaymegordon.com website, featured parts of Gordon’s Kung Fu Panda Power Work from approximately 1999 to 2001.

62. Upon information and belief, one or more of Defendants gained access to Gordon’s illustrations and stories, including those from Gordon’s Kung Fu Panda Power Work by receiving a copy or copies at or by Disney or DreamWorks Studios and/or by the display of Gordon's works on Gordon's websites or elsewhere.
